Flux Downloads Info

- Stable – a stable version is one that has been fully tested and is ready to go.
- Beta – a beta version is one that is still in the testing phase and while it may have new features, functions, and bug fixes, it may also cause problems with the way your machine and software functions.

You should always use a stable software with a stable firmware and a beta software with a beta firmware. You can check that you are using the correct versions together when downloading the software as they are listed under stable and beta on the flux3dp website.

We recommend only using the stable versions as they are ready to go and will not cause the number of problems that using a beta version might, so you do not risk losing time creating with your machine due to a beta version error. We are unable to help you over the weekends so please don't download on a Friday.
